АПСТРАКТ

Протоколот кој го дефинираме како комбинација на добро однесување и логично расудување со цел ефикасна и ефективна комуникација во контекст на дипломатијата и меѓународните односи, е всушност база, основа на која го градиме севкупниот наратив за одредена активност, кој е јавно и јасно видлив за јавноста. Без добро организирана активност која не отстапува од протоколарните правила и процедури, проследена од беспрекорно медиумско покривање не можеме да кажеме дека се постигнати посакуваните ефекти на соодветната активност, ниту, пак, целите кои се првично поставени за таа активност. Во тој контекст, не може да се каже дека протоколот и односите со јавноста „се двете страни на паричката", туку дека заеднички се дел од мозаикот кој има една цел, една замисла и нема спротивставени елементи. Имајќи го тоа на ум, во новите текови на развојот на односите со јавноста, односно воспоставувањето на стратегиски комуникации, протоколот иако теоретски не е составен дел од овој конгломерат, тој е тесно поврзан со сите придружни елементи на стртатегиските комуникации, вклучувајќи го и процесот на испраќање на пораки (на вербален, паравербален и невербален начин). Моќта на протоколот во корелација со односите со јавноста е навистина значителна – лошата координација помеѓу овие два сегменти може да биде погубна за угледот и достоинството на која било висока официјална личност, може да нанесе непоправлива штета на државата и да предизвика меѓународен скандал или инцидент.

Клучни зборови: протокол, односи со јавноста, стратешки комуникации, дипломатија.

PROTOCOL AND PUBLIC RELATIONS: 'A' AND 'Ω' OF A WELL-ORGANIZED ACTIVITY

Sande Smiljanov PHD
Ministry of Internal Affairs
e-mail: ssmiljanov@gmail.com

ABSTRACT

The protocol, defined as a combination of good behavior and logical reasoning, with one goal – effective and efficient communication in context of diplomacy and international relations, is a base, a foundation on which we can build an overarching, clearly visible narrative for a certain activity. Without a well-organized activity that doesn't fall short out of the defined protocol rules and procedures, along with an impeccable media coverage we will not be able to achieve our desired affects and goals set for the activity in question. Having that in mind, one can not say that protocol and public affairs are the two sides of a coin – but that they are part of one common mosaic that has one goal, one idea. It is important to underline that in the lines of the newest development of the field of public affairs and the creation of strategic communications, the protocol segment, although not theoretically, but practically its closely connected to all of the STRATCOM elements, including the verbal, para-verbal and non-verbal messaging. The power of protocol in correlation with public affairs is substantial, especially having in mind that bad coordination between these two segments can be devastating to the dignity of a certain high official, it can have irreparable damage to the state and can be the cause of an international scandal or incident.

Key words: protocol, public affairs, strategic communications, diplomacy.

RESEARCH METHODOLOGY

During the preparation of this paper, the theoretical setting of the two complementary areas - the protocol and public relations, as well as their practical realization during the maintenance of a certain activity which in itself has its own goals and tasks, was taken into account. The inductive-deductive method was used, that is, the methods of analysis and synthesis, as well as the method of concretization with special forms of generalization and specialization. It is very important for areas like protocol (diplomatic protocol), where general conclusions can be drawn from individual cases, and vice versa – specific conclusions can be obtained on the basis of general features.

INTRODUCTION

The fact that the organization and realization of every ceremonial and official activity not only includes, but is also based on protocol principles and rules, shows the importance of protocol as an area within the state, especially within its diplomacy. Protocol is more than necessary in the context of diplomacy because it is a kind of manual for diplomatic procedures, such as, for example, the proper introduction and greeting, the "dress code", i.e. the way of dressing, the introduction, ranks and titles, the organization of seating and similar. The protocol is present and required throughout the official part of the event, and even during breaks, during the organization of meals (official lunches and dinners), as well as during the overall public display of the organized event.

The protocol, according to the established definition, is a series of rules that mandate good behavior in official life and at ceremonies involving entire governments and nations, as well as their representatives. It is a recognized system of international politeness (Thompson, 2001). And the basis of the manners that are an integral part of the protocol is the etiquette, which derives from the customs, from the practice and from the authorities. Etiquette enables the preservation of respect for others and is accepted as correct behavior in the process of interpersonal interaction (Smiljanov, 2022).

If viewed from a historical perspective, the protocol has indeed played a significant role in the development of international relations. The protocol took its first form in ancient Egypt, through the "Instructions of Ptahhotep" (Donaldson, 1990), while as a science it experienced its renaissance in the 19th century. Its influence is particularly clear today, when, given technological progress and the development of communications, protocol and protocol practice are more visible and amenable to analysis than at any time before in human history.

PROTOCOLARY ACTIVITIES IN THE PUBLIC EYES

"It takes 20 years to build a reputation and only five minutes to ruin it. If you think about that, you'll do things differently." Through this sentence of Warren Buffett, we can summarize the importance of public relations and their impact on the reputation and reputation of every single elected official, today, if we take into account the speed of communications and advanced technologies.

And, indeed, today, the communication component of political life is more important than ever before, and this, in turn, is a reason for a closer look at the components that are an integral part of communication between people.

Considering the communication theory, the communication process is composed of two basic components - verbal communication (Gilbert, 2002) with all its associated elements, as well as non-verbal communication, that is, metacommunication (Paise, 2004). The tonality and pace of verbal transmission, which are also accompanying elements of verbal communication, can be singled out as the third pillar of communication, which is also called paraverbal communication.

Public figures and politicians, according to communication theory, are the sender of the message, political information (sent verbally and non-verbally) is the message, while the key audience (which varies in relation to the defined goal) is the recipient of the message. And the fulfillment of the goal is also the main reason why public figures should (not) adhere to the established rules and procedures of the protocol, of course depending on the desired outcome (Smiljanov, 2022).

Basically, the political structure should always convey its message in a credible way, encouraging the belief of others and building trust with key audiences – something that is the basis for achieving political goals, especially in periods of election or re-election of political office.

This can be very easily mirrored in international relations where verbal and non-verbal communication go hand in hand and where they do not always move in the same direction. In international politics, words say one thing, but non-verbal gestures show a completely different behavior. In fact, it is even stronger if you consider that non-verbal communication represents 60-70 percent of communication, including eye movement, posture, gestures, kinesia (body movement), facial expression, touch, distance, and the like. (Kurblija, Slavik, 2001).

Seen from a broader perspective, the protocol indicates not only the organization of an event, but the level of friendship between two countries. And, precisely the visible segment of a certain event - whether it is a conference of an international nature, a visit of a high-ranking foreign statesman, a visit of a domestic high-ranking person abroad or the organization of any other event of a higher rank belongs to the domain and responsibilities of relations with the public. “De facto” everything that can cause a negative reaction, which is a relapse from protocol inadequate planning or execution, has the mentioned negative effect on the public through the entire conglomerate of tasks, activities and products of public relations.

As a core example for this is the inappropriate seating of Kosovo President Hashim Thaci at the ceremony marking the 100th anniversary of the First World War in Paris and the consequent error at the ceremony marking the Armistice Day in the First World War, when Thaci was seated at the very beginning, right behind the leaders of the biggest players in the war, France, Germany and Russia, which caused an avalanche of reactions, because it was seen and “perpetuated” by the large number of media representatives, photojournalists and cameramen. The same applies to mistakes and intentional blunders that represent a political message. The photo of the meeting in the Israeli Ministry of Foreign Affairs between the Deputy Minister of Foreign Affairs, Daniel Ayalon, and the Turkish Ambassador to Israel, Ahmet Oguz Çelikol, when the interlocutors were placed in seats with an obvious height difference, caused a strong reaction from the Republic of Turkey. Recently, a video of the official visit of Finnish Prime Minister Sana Marin to Croatia caused an avalanche of negative comments, which referred to protocol unacceptable behavior by Croatian President Zoran Milovanovic. Namely, immediately before the meeting with Croatian President Milovanovic, Finnish Prime Minister Marin was left in the lobby alone, waiting for the Croatian President for almost two minutes. Marin walked through the reception hall, looking at the art paintings in the hall, her body language showing boredom and anticipation. All this was recorded by the cameras called by the public relations of the Croatian President, which opened the residence of the President of Croatia to the public eye and actually made this inappropriate move publicly visible and known. That fact, by itself, can cause a reaction from the respective country, in this case Finland, which is publicly humiliated by the move. And that this is a deliberately transmitted public message, using the presence of media representatives, is also shown by the statement of the Croatian president regarding Finland's application for membership in NATO - the Alliance, in which it is said that “Finland and Sweden's request for membership in NATO is a very dangerous adventure” and that “it should be discussed”, supplemented by the opinion that the Croatian Parliament should condition this membership on the fulfillment of Croatian conditions for amending the Election Law in Bosnia and Herzegovina. This event caused an avalanche of reactions in Croatia as well, after which the Office of the Croatian President reacted with a statement saying that “it is about malicious and incorrect information” and that it was not the Croatian President who was late, but the Finnish Prime Minister, which at the meeting she came half an hour after the scheduled time. However, this announcement does not state that the Finnish Prime Minister in Croatia is moving according to the guidelines of the Croatian protocol and that the possible delay is a problem caused by the Croatian protocol, not the Finnish one.

There are many such examples, like the so-called “couch scandal”, when, during a visit to the Republic of Turkey, the President of the European Commission, Ursula von der Leyen, was “surprised” that, unlike the President of the European Council, Charles Michel, she was not given a chair next to the Turkish President Erdogan and had to sit on the couch, especially considering that von der Leyen and Michel have the same protocol rank and must be treated in the same way. This case gained additional weight if we take into account the fact that Von der Leyen is a woman and that the attitude of the Turkish president was considered a disrespectful attitude that was "absolutely unacceptable" in the European Union (Smiljanov, 2022).

Such an example is the impatience of the former President of the United States, Donald Trump, towards Angela Merkel, who in the eyes of the world public and a dozen photojournalists in the White House did not shake hands (despite the attempts of the former German chancellor), as well as the leaving of the press conference by the Russian Foreign Minister Sergey Lavrov, organized during the official visit of British Foreign Minister Liz Truss to Moscow.

COOPERATION BETWEEN THE PROTOCOL AND PUBLIC RELATIONS

Protocol and public relations are in constant communication and coordination. Simply put, there is no properly organized and realized event without an excellently organized protocol, nor without proper media coverage.

If the realization of an international conference is taken as the subject of development, within the framework of the organizational preparation, a team for the realization of the conference, called "secretariat", is primarily established.

The Secretariat is led by one, "Chief Coordinator" and persons in several specific areas, namely: one/two specialists in protocol and logistics, one expert in the domain of policies and planning, one member responsible for the security of the conference, one member from the organizational unit (OU) for international/regional/bilateral cooperation, one specialist in the field of public relations, one expert in the field of finance and one member of the OU for communication and computer systems, necessary for technical support of all material and technical means of the conference (Smiljanov, 2020).

The public relations coordinator, according to the "Manual for organizing conferences and events in a public/state institution" is an "indispensable part of the team, which, according to the purpose and elements of the conference, prepares its own Plan for media coverage of the conference, with its own goals. The public relations coordinator is the link that will organize the media coverage, make changes in the agenda and program, changes in the organization with the aim of more effective media coverage."

In fact, this coordinator is responsible for the visibility of the conference, which includes the following tasks: placing information before the Conference on the Internet and social networks, in order to encourage interest in media coverage, organization and content renewal of the website dedicated to the conference, direct contact with certain media houses for additional interest in increased media coverage (interviews, editorial comments, etc.), determining the place for media statements and organizing it, setting up a Press Center at the location where the conference is held, with all its elements, organization of a media briefing before the start of the conference, calling of the media and organization of transport to the Conference site (if necessary), organization and implementation of media activities on the day of the Conference (welcoming and organization of the media, preparation of announcements, photo galleries, video mate recording coordination rial, dissemination of information, use of social networks, organization of confirmed additional media activities, etc.), coordination of multimedia material before, during, and after the conference - video recording - material and its use, production of photographs and photo- galleries, as well as production of photographs for the needs of conference participants, coordination of all printed graphic material needed for the Conference – graphic processing of folders, pens, information sheets, conference logo, banner for the main hall and the hall intended for the media, banner for main photo, etc. (Smiljanov, 2020).

In all these tasks and responsibilities, the public relations specialist, who as the coordinator manages a public relations team of at least 3 to 4 people, works closely with the main coordinator and the protocol coordinator, because a large part of these tasks also has protocolar aspect that must be considered. For example, the determination of the place for media, its organization, as well as the realization of statements (the transfer of high-profile participants from the main hall to the place for statements, the foreseen so-called "exit" strategy, etc.) are determined in full accordance with the protocol. The same applies to the organization of the briefing, which is usually held a few days before the conference with the participation of high authorities from the institution, as well as to the coordination related to all the accompanying elements of the conference day itself.

When it comes to the main conference part, in the domain of public relations, exceptional attention must be paid to setting up the press room, in detail. This complex task is the responsibility of the Public Relations Coordinator, but continuously supported by the Protocol Coordinator. The set of tasks includes: placing the panel with the logo of the Conference at an adequate height, placing indicators with small flags of the countries where the participants come from, providing the necessary number of chairs for sitting the present guests from the delegations and other guests, determining a place for the representatives of electronic and print media and cameramen and photojournalists, installation and testing of audio equipment and camera connection equipment, adequate lighting, defining a place for the moderator of media statements, defining a place for interpreters (if a language other than Macedonian is used) and developing a strategy for the entry and exit of the heads of delegations (Smiljanov, 2020).

ORGANIZATION OF THE ORGANIZATIONAL UNITS OF THE PROTOCOL AND PUBLIC RELATIONS

Usually, the specialists in charge of the protocol in a certain institution or organization are part of the cabinet of the highest management of that institution - President, Prime Minister, Minister, Parliament Speaker. It is particularly significant because of the need for direct and immediate communication with top management and his or her top-ranking advisors. In some institutions, public relations specialists are also part of this Cabinet, which is an efficient way of coordinating and synchronizing activities. However, it is possible in certain institutions that are either smaller or have a simpler organizational structure.

In the Ministry of Internal Affairs, for example, the Section for Protocol Events and Activities and the Section for Public Relations are positioned within the Sector of Public Relations, which are directly connected and in constant coordination and communication with the Cabinet of the Minister.

The Ministry of Defense, as one of the more complex Ministries in which the Army of the Republic of North Macedonia is included, has a separate organizational unit that currently includes the Section for Protocol, as well as the Section for Media and Multimedia Work (public relations). It is a system that has proven many times to be effective and to enable relatively simple and fast communication and coordination. Placing these two organizational units under one “roof” - the Sector for Communications, Analytics and Operational Support, allows for rational use of resources and close coordination, but presents a challenge - especially in the domain of protocol, when it comes to communication with the highest official in the institution – the minister and his or her cabinet.

Indeed, this example also indicates that from an organizational point of view, the place of protocol is in the office of the highest official in the respective institution, while the place of public relations is in the appropriate organizational unit dedicated exclusively to communications, but with a direct uninterrupted connection with the cabinet (and, therefore, with the protocol in the institution).

CONCLUSION

The numerous examples, the daily organization of activities from the public domain, as well as the organization of complex events indicate that there is an inextricable link between protocol and public relations at every stage from planning, to the organization and realization of the respective activity. The two interrelated areas essentially complement each other and have the same goal - successful implementation of the activity, strengthening the credibility of the institution and the highest management person, conveying the desired messages to the public and professional placement vis-à-vis persons who are representatives of foreign countries and institutions (if any).

Simply put - without a successfully realized activity from a protocol aspect, there is no adequate realization of the communication goals planned for that activity, but on the contrary - the time planned for the transmission of the desired messages will be used for the transmission of a certain intentional or unintentional “gaffe”.
